ASHLEY KIGHTLINGER, contractor, Marysville. This family is of German extraction, the pilgrims of whom settled in Pennsylvania, where the parents, Abraham and Nancy, were born. They were among the pioneers of 1812 to Morrow County, Ohio, traveling from Pennsylvania with ox teams. They raised a family of six boys and six girls, eleven of whom are living. Five of the boys were soldiers in the three years' service of the Union army in the late rebellion, one of them enlisting the third time. Some of the children subsequently settled in Tazewell County, Ill., where the father died in the seventy-third year of his age. The subject of this sketch wee born in Morrow County, Ohio, in 1836. Left. an orphan when young, he had the rugged edge of life to fight, and without means he warted out, finding employment in Indiana, and by strict economy and perseverance he wits enabled to save enough to purchase thirty-five acres of land in Paris Township, paying $25 per acre for the same. This was the stepping-stone to his further success, which has been earned by bard labor and honest toil. In 1879, he moved to this city, and settled on his commodious place of fourteen acres, where he has since been engaged in teaming and contracting. he enlisted in the ranks of the Union army August 9, 1862, in Company K, Ninety-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. He participated in the battles of Chickasaw Bluff, Miss., December 29, 1862; Arkansas Post, January 11, 1863; Mobile, Ala., December 22, 1864; Sabine Cross Roads, La., April 8, 1864; Fort Gaines, Ala., August 2 to 23, 1864; Fort Morgan, Ala., August 5 to 23, 1864, and others. He was wounded at Vicksburg with a piece of shell, but lost no time in consequence. The marriage of Mr. K to Miss Amanda, daughter of Benjamin C. and Cynthia A. Grubb, occurred in October, 1858. Willie E. is the only living issue of this union. Mr. K. is a member of both branches of the IOOF. order, of the G. A. R., and connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

refusing to sell Cuba, and if disturbances there should threaten American security, the United States would be justified in "wresting" the island from Spain.

Antislavery Northerners now charged the administration with violating the spirit of the Compromise of 1850. They said that Pierce, acting as the tool of the South, was conspiring to bring in a new slave state even at the risk of war with Spain and other European powers.

Reopening the Controversy

By the 1850s the line of frontier settlement had reached the great bend of the Missouri. Beyond the western boundaries of Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri stretched the vast expanse of plains earlier called the Great American Desert and designated as an Indian reserve. Now it was known that large sections of this region were suited to farming, and in the Northwest people were saying that the national government should open the area to settlement, provide it with territorial government, and remove the Indians. The problem of communication between the older states and the trans-Mississippi West had become urgent.

THE KANSAS-NEBRASKA ACT

The idea of a transcontinental railroad had been discussed in and out of Congress for years. Disagreement arose when people talked about the eastern terminus of the road and its specific route. Several cities pressed their claims, but the leading contenders were Chicago, St. Louis, Memphis, and New Orleans. The transcontinental railroad, like nearly everything else in the fifties, became entangled in sectionalism. It became a prize that the North and South struggled to secure.

One argument against a southern route had been removed through the foresight of Secretary of War Jefferson Davis. Surveys had indicated that a road with a southern terminus would probably have to pass through an area south of the Gila River, in Mexican territory. At Davis's suggestion, Pierce appointed James Gadsden, a Southern railroad builder, to negotiate with Mexico for the sale of this region. Gadsden persuaded the Mexican government to dispose of a strip of land that today comprises a part of Arizona and New Mexico, the so-called Gadsden Purchase (1853), which cost the United States $10 million.

Particularly interested in a transcontinental railroad was Senator Stephen A. Douglas, and his interest influenced him to introduce in Congress a fateful legislative act, one that accomplished the final destruction of the Compromise of 1850. As a senator from Illinois, a resident of Chicago, and, above all, the acknowledged leader of the Northwestern Democrats, Douglas naturally wanted the transcontinental railroad for his own city and section. He realized too the potency of the principal argument urged against the northern route: that west of the Mississippi it would run largely through unsettled Indian country. In January 1854, as chairman of the Committee on Territories, he acted to forestall this argument. He introduced a bill to organize a huge new territory, to be known as Nebraska, west of Iowa and Missouri.

Douglas seemed to realize that his bill would encounter the opposition of the South, partly because it would prepare the way for a new free state, the proposed territory being in the Louisiana Purchase area north of the 36°30′ line of the Missouri Compromise and hence closed to slavery. In an effort to make the measure acceptable to Southerners, Douglas inserted a provision that the status of slavery in the territory would be determined by the territorial legislature, that is, according to popular sovereignty. Theoretically, at least, this would open the region to slavery. The concession was not enough to satisfy extreme Southern Democrats, particularly those from Missouri, who feared that their state would be surrounded by free territory. They demanded more, and Douglas had to give more to get their support. He agreed to two additions to his bill: a clause specifically repealing the antislavery provision of the Missouri Compromise, and another creating two territories, Nebraska and Kansas, instead of one. Presumably Kansas would become a slave state. In its final form the measure was known as the Kansas-Nebraska Act.

Douglas induced President Pierce to endorse his bill, and so it became an official Democratic measure. But even with the backing of the administration, it encountered stiff opposition and did not become a law until May 1854. Nearly all the Southern members of Congress, whether Whigs or Democrats, supported the bill, and nearly all the Northern Whigs opposed it. The Northern Democrats split, with half of their votes in the House going for the act and half against it.

Of greater importance than the opposition to the Kansas-Nebraska Act in Congress was the reaction against it in the Northern states. The whole North seemed to blaze with fury at this latest demonstration of the power of the slavocracy, and much of the fury was directed at Douglas, who, in the eyes of many Northerners, had acted as a tool of the slaveholders. No other piece of legislation in congressional history produced so many immediate, sweeping, and ominous changes as the Kansas-Nebraska Act. It destroyed the Whig party in the South except in the border states. At the same time, as many Southern Whigs became Democrats, it increased Southern influence in the Democratic party. It destroyed the popular basis of Whiggery in the North, with the result that by 1856 the national Whig party had disappeared and a conservative influence in American politics had been removed. It divided the Northern Democrats and drove many of them from the party. Most important of all, it called into being a new party that was frankly sectional in composition and creed.

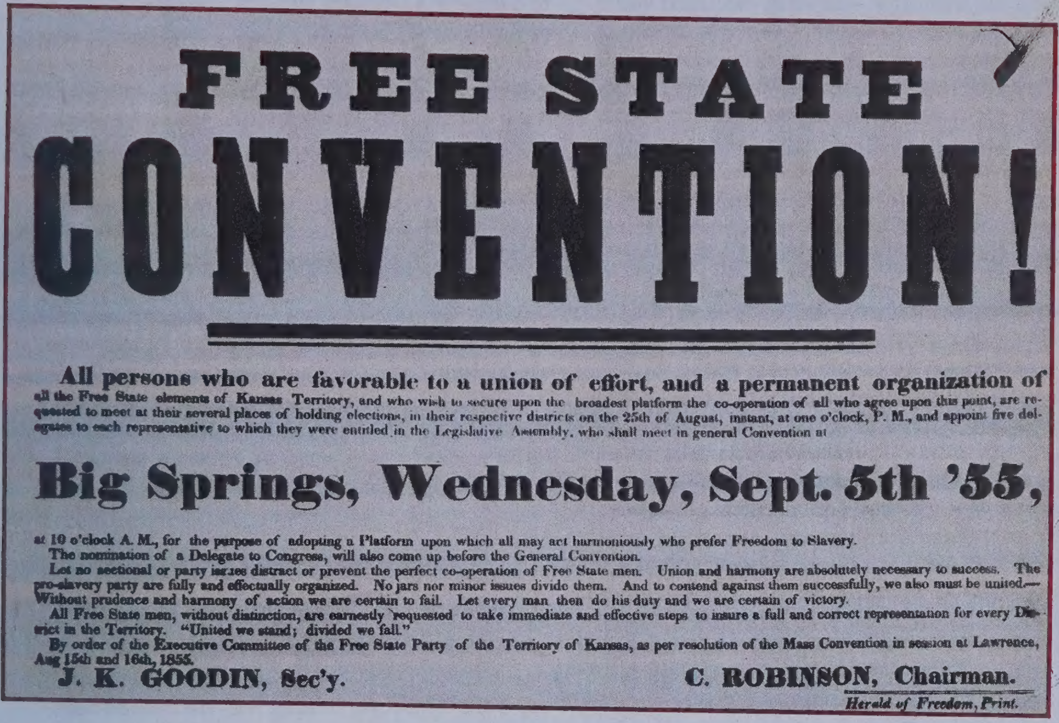
Men in both the major parties who opposed Douglas's bill took to calling themselves Anti-Nebraska Democrats and Anti-Nebraska Whigs. In 1854 these men formed a new party and began to call themselves "Republicans." Originating in a series of spontaneous popular meetings throughout the Northwest, the Republican movement soon spread to the East. In the elections of 1854 the Republicans, often acting in concert with the Know-Nothings, elected a majority to the House and won control of a number of Northern state governments.

At the start the Republican party was a one-idea organization: it simply opposed the expansion of slavery into the territories. Its original members were mostly former Whigs and Free Soilers but also included a substantial number of former Democrats. In large part it represented the democratic idealism of the North. But it also represented the agricultural and business interests of that section. Soon the party gained additional support from advocates of federal aid to economic activity – advocates of high tariffs, homesteads, and internal improvements – who blamed the South for blocking such aid and thus hindering Northern development. When the Know-Nothing organization broke up, the Republicans absorbed most of its members. Thus the new party inherited the odor of nativism that once had clung to the Whigs. Like the Whigs, the Republicans repelled the Roman Catholics among the German, Irish, and other foreign-born groups. Yet the Republicans succeeded in attracting Protestants among the German and the Scandinavian as well as the British immigrants.

"BLEEDING KANSAS"

The pulsing popular excitement aroused in the North by the Kansas-Nebraska Act was sustained by events occurring during the next two years in Kansas. Almost immediately settlers moved into this territory. Some went as dedicated men who were determined to make Kansas free – or slave. Those from the North were encouraged by press and pulpit and the powerful organs of abolitionist propaganda. Often they received financial help from such organizations as the New England Emigrant Aid Company. Those from the South often received financial contributions from the communities they left. Kansas [illegible] voted – IA

In the spring of 1855 elections were held for a territorial legislature. Thousands of Missourians, some traveling in armed bands, moved into Kansas and voted. Although there were probably only some 1,500 legal votes in the territory, more than 6,000 votes were counted. With such conditions prevailing, the proslavery forces elected a majority to the legislature, which proceeded immediately to enact a series of laws legalizing slavery. The outraged free-staters, convinced that they could not get a fair deal from the Pierce administration, resolved on extralegal action. Without asking permission from Congress or the territorial governor, they elected delegates to a constitutional convention that met at Topeka and adopted a constitution excluding slavery. They then chose a governor and legislature and petitioned Congress for statehood. Pierce stigmatized their movement as unlawful and akin to treason. The full weight



FREE STATE CONVENTION!

All persons who are favorable to a union of effort, and a permanent organization of all the Free State elements of Kansas Territory, and who wish to secure upon the broadest platform the co-operation of all who agree upon this point, are requested to meet at their several places of holding elections, in their respective districts on the 25th of August, instant, at one o'clock, P. M., and appoint five delegates to each representative to which they were entitled in the Legislative Assembly, who shall meet in general Convention at at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of adopting a Platform upon which all may act harmoniously who prefer Freedom to Slavery.

The nomination of a Delegate to Congress, will also come up before the General Convention.

Let no sectional or party issues distract or prevent the perfect co-operation of Free State men. Union and harmony are absolutely necessary to success. The pro-slavery party are fully and effectually organized. No jars nor minor issues divide them. And to contend against them successfully, we also must be united.—Without prudence and harmony of action we are certain to fail. Let every man then do his duty and we are certain of victory.

All Free State men, without distinction, are earnestly requested to take immediate and effective steps to insure a full and correct representation for every District in the Territory. "United we stand; divided we fall."

By order of the Executive Committee of the Free State Party of the Territory of Kansas, as per resolution of the Mass Convention in session at Lawrence, Aug 15th and 16th, 1855.

Free-Soilers Organize in Kansas
After the Kansas proslavery elements, with the aid of "border ruffians" from Missouri, had elected a proslavery legislature, the Free-Soilers called a convention and prepared to organize their own, antislavery government. A broadside was widely posted to announce the call. (The Kansas State Historical Society, Topeka) of the government, he announced, would be thrown behind the proslavery territorial legislature.

A few months later a proslavery federal marshal assembled a huge posse, consisting mostly of Missourians, to arrest the free-state leaders in Lawrence. The posse not only made the arrests but sacked the town. Retribution came immediately. Among the more extreme antislavery men was a fierce, fanatical old man named John Brown who considered himself an instrument of God's will to destroy slavery. Estimating that five antislavery men had been murdered, he decided that it was his sacred duty to take revenge. He gathered six followers, and in one night murdered five proslavery settlers (the "Pottawatomie massacre"). The result was civil war in Kansas—irregular, guerrilla war conducted by armed bands, some of them more interested in land claims or loot than in ideologies.

People in the North and the South believed (and whether or not their beliefs were completely correct is historically unimportant) that the aggressive designs of the other section were epitomized by what was happening in Kansas. Thus "Bleeding Kansas" became a symbol of the sectional controversy.

In May 1856 Charles Sumner of Massachusetts arose in the Senate to discuss affairs in the strife-torn territory. He entitled his speech "The Crime against Kansas." Handsome, humorless, sincere, doctrinaire, Sumner embodied the extreme element of the political antislavery movement. In his address he fiercely denounced the Pierce administration, the South, and slavery; and he singled out for particular attention as a champion of slavery Senator Andrew P. Butler of South Carolina. It was an age when orators were wont to indulge freely in personal invective, but in his allusions to Butler and others, Sumner went further than most.

Particularly enraged by the attack was Butler's nephew, Preston Brooks, a member of the House from South Carolina. He resolved to punish Sumner by a method approved by the Southern code—by publicly and physically chastising him. Approaching him at his desk when the Senate was not in session, Brooks proceeded to beat him with a cane until Sumner fell to the floor in bloody unconsciousness. The injured senator stayed out of the Senate four years, and during his absence his state refused to elect a successor. Brooks, censured by the House, resigned and stood for reelection. He was returned by an almost unanimous vote.

The violence in Congress, like that in Kansas, was a symbol. It showed that Americans were becoming so agitated by their differences that they could not settle them by the normal political processes of debate and the ballot.

BUCHANAN AND DEPRESSION

The presidential campaign of 1856 got under way with the country convulsed by the Brooks assault and the continuing violence in Kansas. The Democrats adopted a platform that endorsed the Kansas-Nebraska Act and defended popular sovereignty. The leaders wanted a candidate who had not made many enemies and who was not closely associated with the explosive question of "Bleeding Kansas." So the nomination went to James Buchanan of Pennsylvania, a reliable party stalwart who as minister to England had been safely out of the country during the recent troubles, though he was a signer of the highly controversial Ostend Manifesto.

The Republicans, engaging in their first presidential contest, faced the campaign with confidence. They denounced the Kansas-Nebraska Act and the expansion of slavery but also approved a program of internal improvements, thus beginning to combine the idealism of antislavery with the economic aspirations of the North. Just as eager as the Democrats to present a safe candidate, the Republicans nominated John C. Frémont, who had made a national reputation as an explorer of the Far West. A sincere Republican, the glamorous "Pathfinder" was selected because he had no political record and was highly available.

The Native American or Know-Nothing party was beginning to break apart on the inevitable rock of sectionalism. At its convention, many Northern delegates withdrew because the platform was not sufficiently firm in opposing the expansion of slavery. The remaining delegates nominated former president Millard Fillmore. His candidacy was endorsed by the sad remnant of another party, the few remaining Whigs who could not bring themselves to support either Buchanan or Frémont.

The campaign was the most exciting since 1840. Its frenzied enthusiasm was due largely to the Republicans. They shouted for "Free Soil, Free Speech, Free Men, and Frémont," depicted "Bleeding Kansas" as a sacrifice to the evil ambitions of the slavocracy, and charged that the South, using Northern dupes like Buchanan as its tools, was plotting to extend slavery into every part of the country.

The returns seemed to indicate that the prevailing mood of the country was conservative. Buchanan, the winning candidate, polled 1,838,000 popular votes to 1,341,000 for Frémont and 874,000 for Fillmore. A slight shift of votes in Pennsylvania and Illinois would have thrown those states into the Republican column and elected Frémont.

James Buchanan had been in public office almost continuously since the age of twenty-three. Nearly sixty-six at the time of his inauguration, he was, except for William Henry Harrison, the oldest president ever to take office. Undoubtedly his age and his physical infirmities had much to do with the indecision he was often to display.

In the year Buchanan took over, a financial panic struck the country, followed by several years of stringent depression. Europe had shown an unusual demand for American food during the Crimean War (1854–1856), and when the demand fell off, agricultural prices were seriously depressed. The depression sharpened sectional differences. The South was not hit as hard as the North. Southern leaders now found confirmation for their claim that their economic system was superior to that of the free states. Smarting under previous Northern criticisms of Southern society, they loudly boasted of their superiority to the North.

In the North the depression strengthened the Republican party and weakened the Democratic. Distressed economic groups—manufacturers and farmers—came to believe that the hard times had been caused by unsound policies of Southern-controlled Democratic administrations. These groups thought that prosperity

The Missouri-Pacific depot at Reece, Kansas. (date unknown)

A disastrous fire in September, 1900, destroyed all the buildings on the west side of Main Street, including the post office. New construction commenced almost immediately and by March all the business buildings destroyed in the fire, plus some new houses, were under construction. "There are no idle carpenters in the city," said the Sunflower.

Most of Reece's social life originated within the town. Occasionally an orator, evangelist, musical group or touring entertainers came along, but it was the local church, lodge or civic function which provided most of the relief from the long workdays endured by the pioneers. Old news items tell of a Reece Cornet Band and a male quartet performing frequently there around the turn of the century.

A black musician, Professor Perry Lowery, became one of Reece's most famous native sons. A cornet player, he traveled with the Ringling Shows as head bandmaster, touring America and Europe. Lowery sometimes gave concerts in Reece and Eureka while on vacation, visiting at his parents' home on Spring Creek near Reece. (See Ch. 7 Ethnic Communities for more on Lowerys.)

The Reece State Bank, with capital of $10,000, was organized in 1910. It served the community until 1933, when it failed to re-open following the "bank holiday" ordered by President Roosevelt. The depositors eventually recovered their money.

Discovery of oil at Sallyards, three miles west, in 1917 was a boon to the Dougherty and Sunflower Hotels and all other Reece businesses, as many of the workers settled in Reece because of the housing shortage at Sallyards.

The oil business fourished throughout most of the 1920's, but as more fields were discovered, an oil glut seriously depressed crude oil prices. The decline of the oil business, combined with the Great Depression, beginning in 1929, dealt a severe blow to the economy of Reece.

The town did not become the rail center once envisioned. Oil far moved on, and school enrollment dwindled. The schools closed, an post office was removed in 1967. Businesses closed. Finally, there wa even a grocery store or service station, and residents were forced to t to El Dorado or Eureka for good and services.

But Reece is still home to a number of people who are happy t there. Alice Moege, a descendant of pioneers who were in the area b the town was founded, says today's approximately ninety-five resi are "good, reliable citizens, and these qualities are the basis causin community to be a good place to live."

REECE CHRISTIAN CHURCH: This church was organiz 1889 and its members met in a frame building until 1909, whe structure was badly damaged by a tornado. The congregation decid erect a new building, the one still in use today, and it was dedicat July 11, 1909, completely free from debt. The church sometimes has served by student ministers from Phillips University and the Ozark College, and at other times by ministers from nearby towns. W Wartich of Joplin, Missouri, is the present minister.

REECE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH: The First Presbyt Church of Reece was the initial religious body organized in Reece. established in 1885, only three years after the founding of the town. and larger building was erected in 1921, and was used until the c became inactive in October, 1962.

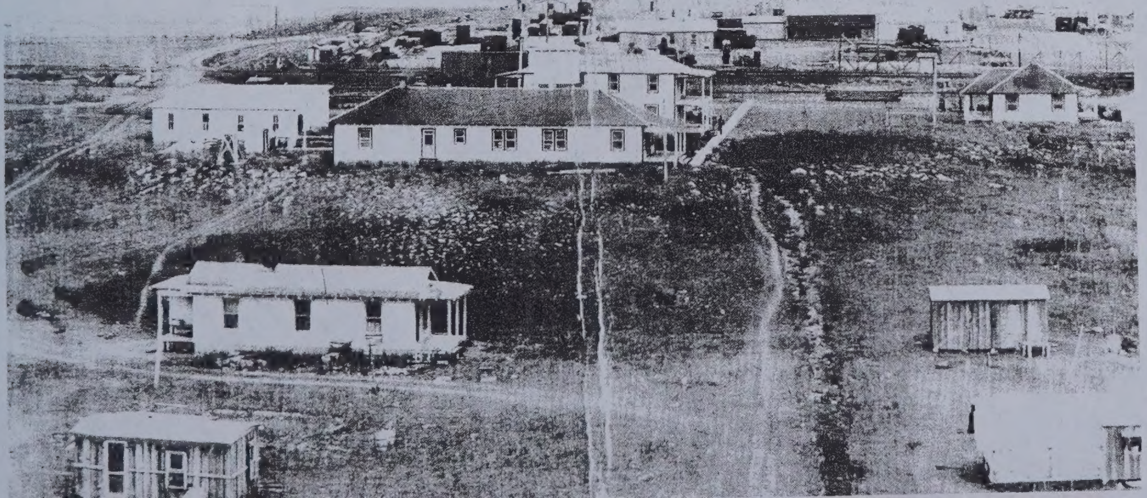
Sallyards , Ks.

By Park W. Carter

Each spring in the late 1800's thousands of cattle were brougl Greenwood County to be fattened in Flint Hills pastures. Alo Missouri-Pacific Railroad, about a mile east of the Butler-Gree County line, cattle holding pens and loading chutes were built. T became known as Sallyards, named for G.S. Sallyards, a pror rancher of the area.

The town remained little more than a stockyard until August, when the Hull #1 oil well was brought in. Producing several hu barrels daily, this well led to the development of the Sallyards fie

Mildred Smith, Eureka, told in an interview with Grace Dobl her father, George Wilson, went to Sallyards in 1918 with a span of and worked as a teamster. Housing was very short at the time and batched in a tent until the following spring, when he was able to m family to Sallyards. "People were coming in droves and getting jo pitching tents," Mrs. Smith said.



A view of Sallyards, taken fr top of an oil derrick in 1921.

SALLYARDS

Lumber was badly needed for building the wooden derricks, and for housing. Once there were three lumber yards: the Reed-Hull, A.C. Houston, and the Pickering Lumber Co., the latter managed by A.H. Kirschbaum.

A post office was established in 1918, with Grace Brown, postmistress. Later, it was moved to Dinwittie's Grocery with Mr. Dinwittie the postmaster. Other early businesses were a cafe, drug store, barbershop, apartment building, and Mrs. Hall's Rooming House. Also in the town, according to Orville Hinerman, Reece, were a large warehouse, machine shop and offices of the Great Southern Oil Co. The oil produced was bought and stored in large tanks by the Kansas City Pipeline Company until it could be shipped out in railroad tank cars.

New homes and businesses were constructed as rapidly as possible. The Great Southern built a two-story rooming house for its workers, but the building of which the people were most proud, believes Mildred Smith, was the two-room schoolhouse.

There was never a high school at Sallyards — grade school graduates attended Reece High. Lela Marburger, Eureka, remembers early teachers, Ray Dawson, Carl Colvin, Mary Call and Rozena Stuber.

At first the town offered few conveniences. Water was carried from a community well. Houses in Sallyards had gas, but those on nearby leases relied on coal oil stoves. Block ice was hauled from Rosalia until the Great Southern built a plant and furnished free ice to its employees. The first electricity was direct-current, and Lela Marburger recalls it worked fine until late evenings when most of the residents turned off their lights at bedtime. The current then got stronger, sometimes causing lighted bulbs to explode. Tables under the light fixtures occasionally were damaged from the hot glass fragments.

A dance was held each week, usually lasting until 2:00 or 3:00 a.m. A former resident remembers being frightened when her father took his turn as deputy on an evening when there was a dance, for sometimes she would hear shots being fired. Other entertainment included singing and playing music, domino games, box socials, school and church activities.

Church services were held in the school, but most church-goers attended either the Christian or Presbyterian Church at Reece. Both Lela Marburger and Mildred Smith remember revivals at which the people attending were considered "happy" and "noisy and excitable." Names of these groups were believed to have been The Burning Bush, Holy Rollers, and Holy Jumpers.

At its peak in the early 1920's Orville Hinerman estimates the population of Sallyards may have been more than 150, with perhaps another 50 persons on leases in the region. Around 1930 an oil glut developed, resulting in many oil workers being laid off. A depression and drought followed and Sallyards never recovered. Almost nothing remains of the town in 1986, and cattle graze where once stood what might have been one of the busiest towns in all of Kansas.

Salt Springs

By Alfred Ferguson

The name was derived from the springs, which were located one mile northwest of the town of Fall River. The spring was discovered by a man named Denny in 1858. Prior to the Civil War, salt was manufactured there by Tom Rodes (Rhodes). In 1860 he sold his claim to Thomas Livingston. He was described as a Missouri desperado who was killed in 1863 at Stockton Missouri. About 1861 the springs were sold to Charles Mograin, a chief of the Osage Indians. The next owner was John Taylor. He estimated the flow of water at 4,000 gallons per day, which would make 1,000 lbs. of salt. Taylor, a physician, claimed the waters possessed valuable mineral properties. He planned to build a health resort. It might be added he achieved a great deal of notoriety as the result of two sensational killings.

Over a period of years various owners manufactured a great deal of salt. As this was a scarce commodity in those times, there was a ready local market. The people believed that a great future industry was situated in their midst. This was before the great salt beds in western Kansas were developed. In the early 70's salt made here won a $50 prize at the Topeka Fair. About this time R. W. Cheney planned to resume production of salt. After some litigation the project was dropped.

Michael Sword located here in 1857. He constructed a burr stone mill on the banks of Fall River; the date is uncertain. It is known that he built a house before he returned to Missouri and Illinois. When he returned in 1860 his buildings had been destroyed by fire. The Indians were blamed. Shortly after the start of the Civil War he moved to Coffey County (KS). The mill was probably built in 1866 when he returned. After being operated by his son the mill was sold to J.D. Allen in 1870 who installed new machinery. It was powered by a turbine water wheel. It had a grinding capacity of fifty barrels of flour and two hundred bushels of corn daily.

About 1869 a town company was organized by Jeff Clogston, John Allen, W.Q. Wickersham, John Tippet, Michael Sword, J. McCleron, and several others. After having meetings and raising money, they contracted for 20 acres of land. 10 acres on the south side of the road came from Michael Sword. The other 10 acres on the north side were from J. McCleron. The land was surveyed for town lots. The buildings on the south side were the Salt Springs Hotel and fifty yards west the livery stable. Both were owned by M. Sword. To the east were several buildings, a blacksmith shop and a dry goods and grocery store. The latter owned by John Pierce. For about a year his business was very good; then he came up missing. His partners or successors claimed he had gone after supplies. One of the men named Pepper was described as a tough customer. It wasn't really known what happened to Pierce. The building was later destroyed by fire. There was over $4,000 insurance on the building and contents.

After these improvements were made, Sword wouldn't give a deed to the town company. Another location was found, but only one house was built on the new location. Thus the town faded away. Charleston was its successor. A post office was maintained at Salt Springs from September 1867 to December 1873. The first postmaster was John Kappel.

In 1872 a new school district was formed. A 18x32 feet building was constructed. This was known as district 44 and the first teacher was W.M. Mason. This school was also referred to as Salt Creek or Dudgeon.

Seeley

By Anne Browning Wilson

The oil field on which the community of Seeley later developed was discovered in 1922. The Seeley community itself was a conglomeration of several small camps of workers for different oil companies. The houses of the Tydol Oil Company camp, the Empire (later Cities Service) Gasoline Plant and houses, the York State camp, the Phillips camp and the White Eagle camp were spread over an area approximately three miles north and south and a mile wide.

Near the center of these was the Seeley Schoolhouse (District No. 12) which was in the southwest corner of 4-23-11. Unlike some oil camps in which identification with a single employer-oil company was the unifying factor, in Seeley it was the school which brought the workers' families together.

The Seeley School District was probably named for K.P. Seeley, a Californian who owned the section of land cattycorner from the school building. A new school was built in the mid-1920's to serve the community's expanding population. It had two rooms divided by a partition which could be removed to use a large stage at one end. This school served grades one through eight and had an average of 60 students during the peak years. Unlike many of the old schools in the area, the Seeley school had electric lights and indoor toilets with septic sytem. The original school building continued to be used as a residence for the two teachers who taught in the new schoolhouse.

After the eighth grade, students had to find their own transportation to high school. On the north end of the Seeley community, students had to go to Madison, and on the south end, they were in the Hamilton district. However, in the central part, students could choose to go either to Madison or Hamilton. In spite of this fragmentation of high school age students, the community remained cohesive.

According to former residents, Don and Edna Birtciel, workers at Seeley "came from all over." Many were from out-of-state: Arkansas, Ohio, Illinois, the eastern states, and a few from Oklahoma.

Seeley had a sizeable gasoline plant which produced casinghead gasoline. Two stores operated at the same time served the Seeley area, and both owners "made a good living," according to Birtciels, attesting to the prosperity of the nearby community. One store (in the northeast corner of 5-23-11 was owned by first the Martins and then the Millers. In the Beeman Grocery Store, fresh meat, ice, produce, and other grocery items were sold, as well as some clothing, fabric, cookies and gasoline.

VALLEY

Valley is still on the move.

Grandma Headlee left last Monday for a visit witht her daughter, Mrs. Richey. Mr. and Mrs. Hazel Porter will take care of the things while she is gone.

Ever so many of the Valley folks went to the show at Pawnee. Some of them were, Oscar Berg, Earl and Edgar Potter, Henry Minear, Lena, Earnest and Webster Boyle, Roscoe Wadlow, Roy Chilcote, Louis Chilcote,, Marvin Tull. They all report a good time.

Mrs. Gett's school is rather slim on account of cotton picking.

Instead of Mr. Minnix going to Blackburn, they moved to Mr. Cantrell's place, east of Valley.

The neighborhood was alarmed one night last week by seeing a big fire at Fred Henry's. It proved to be Mr. Martin's house where Fred Henry had lived since he had been married. Henry's had started to move, and fortunately had shipped most of their things. Only a stove and a couple of beds were burned. We did not learn how the fire started, but we are sorry to hear of the loss.

VALLEY

News is like hen's teeth this week.

Cotton looks fine and lots of picking.

Most of Valley can tell you all about Gollmar Bros. show.

Mrs. Girton and son, John, have returned from the camp meeting at Glencoe. They report a grand time. Valley is dead, spiritually, and we hope some of God's children will come and hold a revival. There is lots of room for one

We notice cotton picking keeps children from school. This ought to be remedied.

Mrs. Boyle and child are getting along nicely.

Mr. Martin's house, one mile south of Valley was consumed by fire one evening last week. We notice buildings burn very readily these droughty times.

Mrs. Headlee has gone visiting

Robins, chairman of the Associated Charities, who with her committee, found new quarters, food and clothing for the sufferers. Charity that is genuine, is silent and modest, does not seek advertisement, in fact ceases to be charity when "puffed up" over its work, but the press agent for the Associated Charities takes this opportunity to say that many persons are being assisted and the organization is ready and willing to help.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Crebo came home Sunday from Kansas City where they have been visiting their daughter, Mrs. E. J. Wolf and Mr. Wolf, who is just recovering from a long siege of typhoid fever. Lincoln promissory note found in Piatt County

By BILL BAHNKE
News-Gazette Correspondent

MONTICELLO — An 1851 promissory note written by Abraham Lincoln illustrates he wasn't shy about collecting his legal fees.

But Lincoln was to wait nearly seven years to collect the $7.50 owed him.

Researchers Dennis Suttles and John Lupton discovered the document on Wednesday while going through old probate papers in the Piatt County circuit clerk's office.

This was the second document with Lincoln's handwriting discovered by the researchers. On Jan. 26, the researchers — part of the Lincoln Legal Papers project — found an 1851 appeal bond with Lincoln's handwriting.

They expect to have their search of Piatt County papers wrapped up in another week.

Lincoln only practiced law in Piatt County for two years — from 1850 to 1852, and so the researchers were surprised to find two documents, Lupton said.

The promissory note the researchers found Wednesday is dated Oct. 13, 1851.

It reads, "Six months after date we or either of us promises to pay A. Lincoln seven dollars and fifty cents for value received."

The note was endorsed by Thomas Dodd and his father, Emanuel Dodd. The Dodds, who could not write, both signed with an X. James Outen, Piatt county clerk and deputy circuit clerk at the time, then wrote the Dodds' names on the note.

Court records show Thomas Dodd, a 20-year old Monticello resident, was charged with two counts of malicious mischief for overturning a wagon and then cutting the spokes of the wagon wheels.

Lincoln and Monticello attorney David Longnecker defended Dodd. They managed to have the second indictment for cutting the spokes quashed, and the state's attorney subsequently declined to further prosecute the case.

Only about 10 percent of Lincoln's cases were criminal in nature, so finding a document connected to one is noteworthy, Lupton said.

Emanuel Dodd died in December 1851 and Lincoln sued the estate for payment of the $7.50 note. It was not until May 29, 1858, that Lincoln's former law partner, John T. Stuart, received the money on behalf of Lincoln.

Suttles said court records also show Lincoln was awarded 37.5 cents in interest, which he never received.

"There are celebrated cases where Lincoln did not accept fees," Lupton said.

The 16th president, for example, gave free help to a Revolutionary War widow who was being bilked by a shyster.

But Lupton noted they have also seen cases in other counties where Lincoln sued to collect a fee.

The charity work "didn't happen as often as historians have been led to believe," Lupton said.

Lincoln was interested in being paid for his work just as any attorney or businessman would be, Suttles added.

Lincoln was making about $3,000 a year at the end of the 1850s, which afforded him a comfortable upper-middle-class living, according to Suttles.

"His house in Springfield was not a log cabin," he said.

Abe made honest effort to be paid

■ Document showing he pursued dead client dispels myth he worked for free.

By DAVE MOORE
H&R Staff Writer

MONTICELLO — Abe might have been honest, but he didn't work for free.

Even after a client died, then-attorney Abraham Lincoln sought payment, a researcher said Thursday.

Evidence of Lincoln's determination to be paid turned up Wednesday in the Piatt County Courthouse, where Lincoln Legal Papers Project researchers are digging through files.

Lincoln and David Longnecker, a Monticello attorney, both defended Thomas Dodd after he was indicted on charges of malicious mischief. Dodd allegedly overturned a wagon belonging to Nathan Starr and James Huntley on March 15, 1851, said John Lupton, a research assistant with the Lincoln Legal Papers project.

Dodd, who also lived in Monticello, also cut the spokes of the wagon wheel, the indictment alleged.

Dodd must have been about 20 years old, Lupton said.

"This Thomas Dodd had to be a pretty big kid to be able to overturn a wagon," Lupton said. "I wish I knew what caused him to do this. But we'll never know that."

"The defense made a motion to quash the indictment, which was granted by Circuit Court Judge David Davis," Lupton said.

After the case was settled, Lincoln wrote a promissory note for $7.50 cents for both Thomas Dodd and Dodd's father, Emanuel, which indicated one or the other would pay Lincoln that amount.

That's the document that researcher Dennis Suttles found while rooting through an attic above Piatt County Circuit Clerk Gary Bickel's office.

Emanuel and Thomas Dodd both signed the bottom of the note with X's, indicating they might have been illiterate, Lupton said.

Emanuel Dodd died in December 1851, so Lincoln sued his estate to pay the $7.50 note, Lupton said. Lincoln won.

"It was a friendly suit, more or less, and so Dodd's administrators were supposed to pay $7.87½ cents," Lupton said. "It looks like Thomas Dodd was a pretty young kid, and he didn't have a whole lot of responsibility in paying debts."

Perhaps that's why Abe sued, Lupton said.

The promissory note from Lincoln dispels the myth that Lincoln represented clients for no cost, Lupton said.

The search for Lincoln documents will end next week, Lupton said.

Family History
Of John Edgar Dodd (1870 – 1948)
And Descendants

By Gladys Marie Dodd, M.A.

PROLOGUE

John Edgar Dodd was born to Civil War veteran John Dodd (1843 – 1918) and Louisa Elizabeth Johnson (1848 – 1929), daughter of John Burton Johnson (1823 – 1905) on April 18, 1870 near Cisco, Piatt Co, Illinois.

John Edgar spoke little of his boyhood other than that his Granny (Margaret Watson Dodd (1808 - 1894) who emigrated with her husband Johnathon Dodd (1803 - 1855) from Pickaway Co, Ohio to Decatur, Macon Co, Ohio as an early settler in 1843. And that she made dumplings like no other, the best a boy ever ate. What he learned from his hard-drinking father's Civil War experience as volunteer in the 107th Illinois Infantry as private in Mr. Lincoln's war is unknown. But the writer in narrating her family history researched military and other records and reported it, as noted elsewhere in DODD ROOTS, 1986.

Although the 3 Dodd brothers – Thomas, Emanuel, and our John Sr. – together with their Uncle Immanuel's son John Jr. (the ill-fated cousin who died in the Confederate Richmond POW camp) all eagerly volunteered the same day in county seat Monticello to join Mr. Lincoln's army for a 3 year hitch to preserve the Union, and bravely engaged in major battles like Chickamauga and Kennesaw Mountain. The 3 surviving brothers became staunch Democrats after the war ended. It would appear they would have honored Republican Lincoln for they knew him in Monticello before the war ever began as the circuit riding lawyer who periodically appeared in their county in the 1840's 1940's and 1850's to practice law. This included hire by Uncle Immanuel Dodd to get his oldest son Thomas Dodd out of trouble with the law. This trial happened 1851 at Monticello when cousin Thomas, old enough to know better, was 19.

I did not know of this kinsman's case until 1993, but neither did anyone else living then for the documents had been shelved in the Piatt Co Court files for 142 years – long unseen and forgotten. Collectors of Lincoln memorabilia went wild with excitement at its discovery, reporting it thusly to the press in 1993:

It is now known that Johnathan Dodd's brother Immanuel Dodd died, at age 47, in Piatt Co., Illinois only a few months after he engaged Abe Lincoln to defend his 19-year-old son Thomas in a court of law. In those days Lincoln of Decatur rode into Monticello to practice law with Mr. McDougal. Here in his county seat, Immanuel Dodd hired Mr. Lincoln to defend Thomas charged March 15, 1951 with malicious mischief for overturning a wagon owned by Nathan Starr and James Huntley, and cutting its spokes. His bond was set at $100.00; the trial was set for October. Lincoln won the case, and charged $7.50 for his legal services. Both Immanuel Dodd and son Thomas endorsed a promissory note to pay within 6 months, each signing with an X. But Immanuel died 2 months later, December 1851, whereupon Lincoln sued his estate. The fee was not paid for 7 years! On May 29, 1858, attorney Abe Lincoln finally received his fee -- $7.87 ½ cents (including the interest charge of 37 ½ cents). This was 2 years before Lincoln's Presidential election.

This story was unknown to Lincoln researchers until February 16, 1993! This Dodd promissory note was discovered on that day when Dennis Suttles and John Lupton, digging through old probate papers, found it in the Piatt Co. Circuit Court files in Monticello Illinois news papers in 1993 published this new bit of Lincoln memorabilia with great interest.

While on the subject of my second-hand connection to Lincoln other than accounts about my Civil War ancestors who served well in Mr. Lincoln's army. There were 4 of them – 2 Ohio Grubbs, father and son; John Mann of Iowa; and John Dodd Sr. of Illinois. My parents personally knew 3 of them. This was before my time.

One Lincoln memory I hold dear in my mind to this day regards an elderly preacher I knew. It happened on this wise:

Age 5 in 1928 I suddenly found my hitherto irreligious parents attending church services 3 times weekly at a little Church of the Nazarene next door to the grocery store on Main Street which my Grandfather John Edgar Dodd sold 5 years earlier to a Mr. Motsinger, as he was moving the Dodd family to a booming Los Angeles, California. Among that devout church membership was an unforgettable character – a gray haired lay preacher who got happy whenever worshippers sang the hymn "O Happy Day". Named Jesse B. Gum, he was called "Grandpa" by the younger church members.

Over time he regaled us with tales of his boyhood in the "old days" when he pioneered in Illinois in the 1840's and 50's. To us urchins accustomed to used Model A Fords on paved streets, we were in awe of Buck and Bright, his yoke of oxen plowing the rich soil of Illinois.

My family was occasionally invited out to Gum's Kansas farmhouse on a Sunday noon to fried chicken and apple pie. Here, I heard this story: One memorable day in Illinois, the Gum family received a very tall visitor into their humble home. The hour growing late he was invited to stay for supper. While waiting for the simple farm meal to appear on the table, the tall stranger persuaded the bashful 4-year-old Jesse to sit on his knee; he did. "Grandpa" Gum then said, "I looked up into the ugliest face I've ever seen. It was Abe Lincoln."

Due to the Great Depression and my father's hereditary terminal illness, our Dodd family on Oak St. was poor, and short on bragging rights. I could have told Northside pupils I knew an old man in my church who had sat on Lincoln's lap for I never forgot this story. I kept him in view a few years. For instance, my mother was dismayed the day that I, in 8th grade in Junior High, saw "Grandpa" Gum pull away from a nearby lumber yard with a load of planks and 2x4s. Hopping aboard on the building material I happily rode through town in plain sight of the public. Riding in a horse drawn wagon yet! My mother long separated from her horse and buggy days censured me for my utter disregard for decorum. A few years later I helped "Grandpa" Gum with his ailing wife the night she died in her sleep. Grieving "Grandpa" had me phone the relatives.

But those memories dimmed for I moved to Arkansas to attend a boarding Bible School situated atop an Ozark mountain amidst blackjack oak and persimmon trees. In 1948 boarding a Trailways bus with one suitcase and $12 cash, I arrived in Champaign-Urbana, to further my long-delayed education at the University of Illinois. Working student jobs at 65¢ per hour, frugally renting residence at a trailer park, walking to campus and doing so passed the bronze statue of the young "Lincoln Rail-Splitter" while enroute to classes in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences where Abraham Lincoln was held in high esteem. Accumulating credits reasonably well, assimilating new culture – such as hearing Robert Frost and Carl Sandburg read their poetry, attending a Leopold Stokowski concert of classical music, and going to Lincoln haunts at New Salem where the young rail splitter held store, tried his hand at land survey, and read Blackstone on English law. Earning the AB and MA by 1955, I left the land of Lincoln and was employed as a high school teacher in social sciences for the next 29 years in the Kansas City and Denver areas. Retiring in 1984 I spent 5 weeks that autumn touring east of the Mississippi. First off came my alma mater, the University of Illinois. Then again out to Lincoln's New Salem and on to see what was new in the museum in Springfield. There, much to my astonishment, a certain wall display came into focus, a mid 19th century chain contraption composed of foot long links, dangled zig-zag against the wall.

The explanatory message told its story. It was the measuring tool once owned and used by the young surveyor Abraham Lincoln of New Salem. It had been bought from a Peter Gum!

The story of our Dodd ancestry is a series of migrations early and late whose emigrants doggedly crossed America in search of a better life in some new Promised Land. It took 3 generations one century plus to locate these green pastures.

Our J john Edgar Dodd was the third generation to find his numerous ones between 1887 and 1948. In the process all 3 generations were to live in part the pioneer life. Hitching their teams to covered wagons, they journeyed ever westward at 3 miles per hour to settle in log cabins with dirt floors. In this manner they spanned America from Delaware coasts to the beaches of California.

Three of John's grandparents were born in Delaware. A new U.S. state, it was the first and smallest consisting of only 3 counties. It had been settled first by the Holland Dutch, then Sweden, and finally by England in 1664 who later awarded it along with Pennsylvania to Quaker William Penn as a haven for persecuted British Quakers. Pacifists, these religious settlers made peace with the Delaware Indians, paying them for land claims and protecting them from fur trading cheats.

Several Dodd householders were known to live in Sussex Co, Delaware, especially in Broadkill Hundred before 1800. Among these was Aaron and Sarah Dodd with sons named Aaron Jr., Adam and Jonathan. No Aaron appears in Delaware Census thereafter. However, in the 1830 Ohio census these Dodds held residence in Ohio. Aaron G. in Hamilton Co., and Adam and Emanuel in Pickaway Co. It became known later that our one Johnathan had a brother named Emanuel (Immanual). Our own Johnathan, born ~~1903~~ 1803 in Dela, ~~When~~ when Thomas Jefferson was U.S. President, also lived in Pickaway Co. as 5 of his 13 children were born here. These were Thomas 1835, Emanuel 1837, Nehemiah 1837, Jonathan Jr. 1838, and Hannah 1839.

Their mother Margaret Watson had come from Virginia to Ohio in 1817 at age 9 and lived even longer and stronger the pioneer life than spouse Johnathan Dodd of Delaware. Decades went into trying to make a go of Ohio – that raw farm wilderness ~~of~~ Timber down, cabin up, corn seeded around the stumps, hominy pounded ~~to it~~ in their hollows. Bear attacks, wolf packs, no schooling for youngens illiterate as themselves, their Pa and Ma. All too soon these hog and in their

hominy squatters of Pickaway Co. west of the big river divide were ready to move out and on to some place beyond the Scioto.

This was to Indiana's Wabash County in 1840. The Dodd migration included other Pickaway families – Aters, Coonrods, Coons, Dallas, Watson. Vermillion Co. Dodds chose to take residence in Highland ~~Prop~~. TWP

The census shows Johnathan was engaged in "agriculture" – probably in farm labor paying 37 ½ cents per diam. Their sojourn here was brief. While corn meal mush and wild game were plentiful, doctors were not. "Milk sickness" claimed many victims whose cows fed on poison plants growing among the sugar maples. By 1842 the Dodd family a~~nd Ater, Coonro~~d, C~~oon~~s, and Margaret's Watson kin packed up, loaded up and piled into wagons bound for greener pastures in the Sangamon country of Illinois. Cradled among the household goods was Dodd's new baby, Ann. And somewhere among the stuff bounced her toddler brother, Joshua.

Our John Edgar Dodd's maternal grandfather was also born in Delaware. Born 8 Jan, 1823, in Sussex Co., he was named John Burton Johnson. Little is known about him here, except that ~~in~~ the 1820-1830 census shows ~~show~~ 8 household heads – all in Sussex Co. – bore the name "Burton" as given, middle, or surname.

The date of his migration to Pickaway Co., Oh is unknown. At age 20 in this COUNTY's ~~country's~~ Monroe Twp, ON ~~On~~ 8 June, 1843 he wed Catherine Mary Collins (daughter of John Collins and Eunice Timmons) – all born in Delaware. To this union were born 5 children, all in Pickaway: Sarah Melinda 1844, Mary Ann 1846, Louisa Elizabeth 1848, Lutisha Prisilla Priscilla OK 1849, and finally a son -- Harrison Goldsberry 1851. 1951. Their father Johnson plied his trade as a blacksmith to keep this family in vittles and linsey-woolsey garb which kept their mother enslaved to the hearth and spinning wheel. In Ohio Johnson and neighbors built small cabins in dense woods west of the SCI Sesto, but changes had come to these shadows. Landless squatters were fewer. The bounty reduced the number of wild boars and bears. Wild Indians were gone, for President Jackson's Congress approved the Indian Removal Policy of 1830 WHICH ~~had~~ force marched scores of eastern (50,000 INDIANS) Indian tribes to occupy Indian Country (now Kansas and Nebraska), and share its barren plains with millions of buffalo.

1850 The 1950 census shows Johnson had no land in cultivation. Such men hired out as day laborers. Flaming forge and anvil kept SMITHY ~~Smitty~~ Johnson in place to shape horse shoes and repair rims on wagon wheels. Life was good, but sadness hit home when their first-born child, 5-year-old Sarah Melinde a, died of scarlet fever on * in 1849.

Just when this family pulled up stakes and took the road to Sangamon country in Illinois is not known. But it was after son Harrison Goldsberry was born in Ohio 20 AUG. ____ 1851, and before the death of his 31-year-old mother Catherine M who passed away in Piatt Co, Ill.on 9 DEC. ___ 1854

Latter-day Saints church calls new bishop to Santa Maria

During a recent Sacramento meeting, Jim Dodd was called as the new bishop of the Santa Maria Second Ward of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

He is replacing Edward Teeples as head of the group consisting of about 600 members.

Dodd is retaining as his counselors Jay Baumgardner and Clark Cashmore. The three of them make up what is called a bishopric in the church.

Dodd and his wife Nancy have lived in the area for six years, moving here from Santa Barbara. They are the parents of six children and have five grandchildren.

He is the branch manager of Security Title and Insurance Company in Santa Maria.

"I'm thrilled to be able to serve. This is the opportunity of a lifetime to serve the members of the church here in this beautiful valley," commented Dodd.

Teeples has served for three years and said, "We're going to miss Santa Maria and it's been a real joy to serve."

A local contractor, he will be moving his family to Utah soon. He and his wife Timi Rae, along with their six children, will settle in Orem.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has a lay ministry. The bishop makes his living at a regular job while serving in his spare time a congregation of between 500 and 700 members located in a designated geographical area.

There are seven wards, or congregations, in the Santa Maria Valley, Pismo Beach, Arroyo Grande and Nipomo and each is served by a bishop. These seven wards together make up the Santa Maria, California Stake, preceded over by a stake president.

The calling of a bishop must be cleared through the First Presidency of the church, with headquarters in Salt Lake City.

Abstract

The mysterious smile of the famed portrait 'The Mona Lisa' has confused both art historians and researchers for many years. The nature of the model's enigmatic smile has been explained as the smile of a new, joyous mother, Lisa Gherardini, who had developed Bell's palsy during her recent pregnancy. Bell palsy which is acute in onset, unilateral, and is considered to be idiopathic is the most common cause of peripheral facial nerve paresis and paralysis. We report an idiopathic facial paralysis (Bell's palsy) as Mona Lisa Syndrome in a 24 years old primigravid woman at 34 weeks of gestation.

Key words:

Bell's palsy, Facial paralysis, Mona Lisa Syndrome, Pregnancy.

Introduction

The theory that the enigmatic smile of 'The Mona Lisa' was an artistic representation of the facial muscle contracture that develops subsequent to Bell's palsy, when the facial nerve has undergone partial Wallerian degeneration and has regenerated, was introduced by Adour [1]. This proposal has garnered great attention by the medical community, since it has a high level of scientific credibility [2]. Bell's palsy is an idiopathic unilateral facial nerve paralysis, often with a rapid onset. Throughout pregnancy the incidence of Bell's palsy has been rised up to 3.3 times compared to nonpregnant women [3].

The precise etiology and associated factors as well as various treatment options aiming at the prevention of associated complications and improving recovery of facial nerve function have intensively been appraised over the past 3 decades. But, therapeutic approach, particularly in pregnant women, remains undecided. Corticosteroids which are applied after the first trimester might be useful [4]. Here is the presentation of a pregnant woman affected by Bell's palsy with the smile of the portrait's model was due to Leonardo da Vinci's anatomically precise representation as Mona Lisa Syndrome at third trimester of pregnancy.

Case presentation

A 24 years old primigravid woman at 34 weeks of gestation was attended to Obstetric and Gynecology Clinic of Health Ministry Imamoglu State Hospital complaining of the asymmetria on her face especially while smiling and inability to close right eyelids. After consultation of patients to an otorhinolaryngologist and an ophthalmologist, it was diagnosed as Bell's palsy. Vitamin B complex containing Vitamin B1, B6 and B12 and artificial tears containing dextran 70 and hydroxypropyl methyl cellulose were given to patient at diagnosis and trimetazidine dihydrochloride was started after delivery. She delivered a male 3950 gr baby with good APGARS and cord gases at 41 weeks gestation via cesarean section. She almost has got recovery after 2 months of delivery.

Discussion

Peripheral neuropathies during pregnancy and the postpartum period are frequent. One of the most common peripheral neuropathies is Bell's palsy [5]. Bell's palsy or weakness of the facial nerve, or cranial nerve VII, is unilateral lower motor neuron lesion of the facial nerve causing facial weakness, including loss of frontalis muscle on the affected side that is usually reversible [6]. It was first defined by Sir Charles Bell, who studied the facial nerve, in 1830 [7]. The incidence of Bell's palsy is indicated to be 45/100,000 pregnancies, but only 17/100,000 in nonpregnant women of childbearing age [8].

There is raised incidence during the third trimester (71-89.5%), followed by 9.8-21.3% in the puerperium, 5.3% in the first trimester, and 2.4-2.6% in the second trimester [9]. Shmorgun et al. [10] demonstrated higher rates of Caesarean section (43.6%), preterm delivery (25.6%), and low infant birth weight of less than 2.500 g (22.7%); all were comparably higher than expected for the general obstetric population. However, Katz et al. [11] did not find a relationship between Bell's palsy and adverse perinatal outcomes such as low Apgar scores (<7) at 5 minutes (4.8% vs. 3.1%), perinatal mortality (2.4% vs. 1.4%), or congenital malformations (4.8% vs. 5.7%) as the case in our case report.

Nota

In the general population, possible causal reasons include viral infection [herpes simplex virus-1 (HSV-1), varicella-zoster virus], vascular ischemia, autoimmune inflammatory disorders, diabetes, Lyme disease, stroke, cerebellar-pontine angle or other tumor, temporal bone trauma, acute or chronic otitis media, cholesteatoma, arterial-venous malformation, myasthenia gravis, mumps, and facial neuroma and hereditary factors [11]. Independent risk factors for the development of Bell's palsy in pregnancy include chronic hypertension and maternal obesity [11]. Other potential etiologies were also reported to be HSV-1 reactivation because of an increased maternal immunosuppression; the increased interstitial edema of the third trimester and postpartum period leads to a venous congestion in the temporal bone fallopian canal containing the facial nevre or perineural edema; maternal hypercoagulability with consequent thrombosis of the vasa nervorum, changing estrogen and progesterone levels; and increased cortisol levels in the third trimester [9].

Swelling of the facial nerve within the petrous temporal bone causes Bell's palsy. This usually occurs only on one side of the face and may happen abruptly or progress over a few days. Symptoms may initially include pain behind the ear or hearing hyperacuity and can progress to include change in taste and salivation, dry eyes due to generally dysfuntion of lacrimation and a consequent inability to lubricate with natural tears, and difficulty with smiling, moving the face, or closing the eye. Corneal abrasions might be also seen due to lack of natural eye protection.

A diagnose of Bell's palsy could be often made clinically. Craniofacial and neuroimaging include computed tomography of the temporal bone or magnetic resonance imaging along the intracranial and extracranial path of the facial nerve or other diagnostic testing including Lyme titers, lumbar puncture, and electroneuronography should be also considered [12].

Bell's palsy tends to resolve spontaneously, might show improvements within 2 weeks of the onset of initial symptoms and return to normal function within 3 to 6 months. The use of prednisolone for its treatment within 72 hours of the presentation of symptoms has been supported by recent meta-analyses of research databases and trials [13]. Steroids might be highly effective and increase the probability of facial nerve recovery and shorter the recovery time with the initiation of steroids, within 24 h of onset of symptoms. Dosing is variable, but prednisolone at a dose 1mg/kg for 5 days followed by an appropriate taper has been recommended [4].

Antivirals, nucleoside analogues including valacyclovir and famciclovir which are classified as pregnancy category B and pose little risk to either mother or fetus, can be offered as another adjunctive treatment for Bell's palsy. Other symptomatic treatment is intended for protecting vision and ocular structure. Preservative-free artificial tears (methylcellulose drops) and overnight ocular lubricants should be used to prevent dry eye, exposure keratitis, and corneal abrasions [4, 14]. Surgical decompression of the facial nerve may be rarely necessary. This might occur during pregnancy or after induction and delivery if the pregnancy has reached 39 weeks gestation. In cases where function has not returned by 6 to 16 months, hypoglossal- facial nerve anastomosis may restore partial function [15].

The Bell's palsy has an excellent prognosis in pregnant and postpartum women, with the majority (70% to 90%) of patients experiencing a full recovery in 3 weeks, whereas the remaining 15% to 30% experiences a full to partial functional recovery within 3 - 6 months [15]. In the setting of complete facial nerve paralysis, full recovery may only be seen in 50% of cases. Recurrence has been reported as rarely [15]. The production of endogenous steroids in pregnant women might affect recovery. This case report shows Bell's palsy in a pregnant woman with Mona Lisa Syndrome at third trimester of pregnancy. Every obstetrician should be aware of Bell's palsy, an enigma, during pregnancy and the puerperium. For these women, a maternal surveillance can be recommended. The surveillance for preeclampsia should also be mounted. A fast and accurate diagnosis with a subsequent immediate treatment might be very important to minimize its associated long-term sequelae.

RECALLING THE CAUSE OF EARLY DEATHS of FOUR DODDS OF OUR FAMILY BRANCH.

I am seeking medical information: —

1937 - My father, LEONARD E. DODD, died, age 34 when I was a 14 yr old high school student in Eureka, Ks. — old enough to observe his steady decline in health. His slurred speech could scarcely be understood his last 2 yrs. Even earlier, his swallowing difficulty was apparent; his diet was largely oatmeal, bread + milk gravy, + sliced bacon. i.e. soft foods. As a child I frequently saw his inability to relax his hand grip rapidly — esp. after lifting a 48 lb. sack of flour by its corners. I playfully tried to straighten out his fingers. He sang church songs around home, but could not whistle. Eyes + legs grew weaker — his lungs notoriously so. On a Nov. Monday 1937, WPA workmen plying pick + shovel spilled a barrel of water on his feet. He took to his bed Mon. night, never to leave it alive. Wed. the Dr. diagnosed pneumonia. That week our small town got the biggest snowstorm I ever saw in Ks. Dad was unable to be moved to the little hospital — a 2-story residence operated by the Basham family — all doctors. Dad died at home Fri. Nov. 19 at 4 P.M. as I made my way home from school; he had been sick abed 4 days. His muscle weakness was observable for years, but doctors cost money, + treatments rare during the Depression. His mother May Dodd + his sister Ruby came from Calif. to the funeral. They thought then he may have ~~then~~ had the recently discovered LOU GEHRING disease. We never knew.

1957 – 30 yrs. after Dad died, my sister Irene unexpectedly died in bed; autopsy showed a heart problem; she was 32. Her final decade indicated declining health problems in much the same way as her father's – LEONARD. Most noticeable was her difficulty in swallowing food. Facial muscles were affected; she had a peculiar Mona Lisa smile. Muscle weakness was pronounced in the 3-day-labor in birthing her only child in 1953. My last home visit to IRENE'S was Sun. Jan. 13, 1957, only 29 hrs. before her sudden death. She did not appear ill. However in attempting to deliver a tray of steaming coffee cups to her guests, her grasp failed again dropping all on the table. She died in K.C., Ks. 14 Jan., 1957, age 32.

1950 My Calif. Uncle Cecil Dodd, who often visited his Ks. brother, so much resembled Dad in appearance that townspeople thought he was Leonard's twin, if not Leonard himself. They could be properly identified when Leonard wore a felt hat & Cecil a cap – Their usual headgear. Cecil had long been considered lazy but his increasing weakness was real. Few dared to ride when Cecil drove; completely sober, his arm muscles were too weak to steer safely. When his providers (parents) died, his sister (my Aunt Ruby) bought him a used car to look for work. Enroute to a factory, he wrecked the car the first day – he & 3 companions were all killed. He was age 45.

1964 My Calif. Uncle LeRoy was a hardworking laborer, a roofer in L.A. Over a period of years this family-inherited disease brought him low. By now money was easier to come by, doctors affordable, & better medical tests available. LeRoy was diagnosed with MUSCULAR DISTROPHY. He could walk across the room with great difficulty, but not twist the knob to open the door. He too swallowed with difficulty. At his son's wedding party in Las Vegas in 1964, LeRoy remained at the table alone while the party danced to band music; he choked to death on a piece of steak he could not swallow. He was 57.

I have never been able to trace this defective gene in our family. To my knowledge, it never appeared again in the rather small DODD family, but I do recall in the 1940s hearing a family rumor that my Great-Uncle Bennie GRUBB, Eureka barber, had a daughter - LOLA GRUBB COLBECK - who may have had muscular distrophy. I cannot verify this.

I DOUBT THIS. gn.

I do not have a computer for research, but MERCK MANUALS describe

(1. MUSCULAR DYSTROPHY: A group of inherited muscle disorders. The DUCHENNE type starts as early as 3-7; the male patient is in the wheelchair by age 12. OTHER MYOPATHY types equally affect both M&F. Symtoms include facial & shoulder weakness, & contracted hand muscles.

Death usually comes by age 50.

(2. I believe MYASTHENIA GRAVIS should be considered:- autoimmune neuromuscular disease characterized by extreme muscle fatigue; weakness of arms, legs, lungs, & eyemuscles with double vision; difficulty in speaking & swallowing. More common among F than M, & beginning age 20-40. [P.S: I remember Dad coming home from his day labor job, so tired he lay on the floor by the door to catch a cooling breeze, unable to move or talk, resting 2 hours before he could come to supper. His sister Ruby thought Leonard's illness began about age 17; Irene's, also in teens.

GENEALOGISTS strongly urge family historians to document medical information known to exist in the blood line — particularly genetic defects which are important to future genetic inheritance & well being. THUS my REQUEST TO YOU. Have you learned of any similar malady existing in the descendants of BENJAMIN C. GRUBB (1817-1863), Civil War veteran buried at Vicksburg Military Cemetery, MISSISSIPPI?

I know the history of only one of his children — that of his son William Henry Grubb 1844-1908 & his descendants of Utopia, Ks. — my line. His daughter — MARY ANNAMAY ("MAY") GRUBB (1876-1949) was my grandmother; she married JOHN EDGAR Dodd (1870-1948) in MAY, 1898 at Utopia, Ks. P.S. 2021. I NOW KNOW MUCH MORE OF GRUBB DESENDANTS. NO KNOWN MUSCULAR DISTROPHY APPEARS

G. Dodd now 98.
